Modern Savage Conversion Blueprint

Date: 2026-04-02

Prepared by: Junior

> This is the execution layer that sits on top of the existing Modern Savage messaging work. The goal is simple: turn positioning into a landing page and creative system that can actually convert paid traffic.

Executive takeaway

Modern Savage already has a strong brand lane: primal nutrition for modern male performance. The missing piece is a tighter conversion system.

Right now the opportunity is not more brand theory. It is to build a page and ad structure that does three things fast:

1. makes the category obvious
1. makes the product feel premium and credible
1. gives men a clean reason to buy now rather than “come back later”

The winning version of Modern Savage should feel:

- premium, not crunchy
- masculine, not parody-masculine
- performance-led, not medical
- convenient, not educationally exhausting

What to build first

Recommended page type

Build a single-product paid-traffic landing page before worrying about a full multi-page brand site.

The first version should be optimized for cold traffic from Meta, creator seeding, and direct-response content.

Get first purchase.

Secondary page objective

Convert as many buyers as possible into subscription.

Core conversion promise

Organ nutrition for men who want a stronger baseline — without eating organs or building a complicated stack.

Recommended offer architecture

If Jesse wants the fastest path to conversion, the page should not present a weak generic supplement offer. It needs a clearer commercial structure.

Best first offer stack

Option A — safest first launch

- 1 bottle: standard price
- Subscribe & save: 10–15% off
- 2 bottle bundle: modest savings
- 3 bottle bundle: strongest savings + free shipping

Why this works:

- simple

- familiar
- increases AOV without gimmicks
- gives subscription a clean default path

Option B — stronger DTC test

- Starter bottle
- Starter + travel bottle bundle
- Subscribe & save with founder pricing

Why this works:

- feels premium
- gives a stronger reason to choose the middle/high tier
- helps position the product as ritual, not one-off purchase

My recommendation

Use Option A first, but make Subscribe & Save the default selected option on page.

Landing page wireframe

1. Hero section

Goal

Answer 4 questions immediately:

- what is it?
- who is it for?
- why should I care?
- what do I do next?

Recommended hero copy

Headline:

Primal nutrition. Modern edge.

Subhead:

A premium daily organ blend for men who want cleaner energy, sharper focus, and a stronger foundation for work, training, and life.

Primary CTA: Shop Now

Secondary CTA: See What’s Inside

Hero support bullets

- Organ nutrition without the prep or taste barrier
- Built for energy, focus, resilience, and daily consistency
- Premium sourcing, simple daily ritual

Visual direction

- bottle front and center
- dark neutral or stone-toned background
- one strong masculine lifestyle image only if it improves clarity
- avoid clutter, ingredient explosions, fake lab visuals, or “biohack” nonsense

2. Trust strip

Goal

Reduce immediate skepticism.

Recommended trust row

- Grass-fed / pasture-raised sourcing

- Third-party tested
- No fillers / straightforward formula
- Subscription available
- Money-back guarantee if offered

If those claims are not fully substantiated yet, swap for only what can be defended.

3. The problem section

Goal

Make the buyer feel understood without sounding melodramatic.

Suggested section headline

Most men don’t have an effort problem. They have a foundation problem.

Body copy

Modern life runs on convenience, stress, bad sleep, and nutrient-light food. A lot of men are training hard, working hard, and still feeling flat. Most supplements either feel synthetic, overhyped, or forgettable.

Modern Savage is designed to give men a stronger nutritional baseline with a ritual they can actually keep.

Why this section matters

It frames the product as a practical answer to a modern problem, not a fringe organ-meat obsession.

---

4. The solution section

Goal

Explain the product simply.

Headline

A simpler way to get the upside of organ nutrition.

Structure

Use 3 cards:

Card 1 — Energy

Nutrient-dense organ support built to help men feel less flat and more switched on.

Card 2 — Focus

A stronger nutritional base for sharper days, cleaner routines, and more consistent output.

Card 3 — Resilience

Built for men balancing training, recovery, pressure, and responsibility.

Important: keep this at a benefit level unless product claims are compliance-cleared.

5. Why organ nutrition / why now

Goal

Handle the category objection.

A lot of buyers will think one of three things:

- “This sounds weird.”
- “I’ve heard of liver supplements but never took them seriously.”
- “Maybe I should just eat better.”

Headline

Why men are paying attention to organ nutrition again

Copy angle

Organs have always been among the most nutrient-dense foods available. The problem was never the logic. It was the friction.

Modern Savage makes that nutritional logic practical: no shopping for organs, no prep, no taste barrier, no complexity.

Support points

- nutrient density
- convenience
- consistency
- premium modern format

6. Ingredient / formula block

Goal

Create credibility without overwhelming the page.

Recommendation

Do not dump an essay here. Use a simple structured layout:

- ingredient name
- plain-English role
- why it matters

Example structure

- Liver — foundational organ nutrition traditionally valued for energy and vitality
- Heart — supports a strong whole-body nutritional profile
- Kidney — helps round out the organ blend with additional nutrient diversity
- [other organ] — short functional explanation

Final wording should be tightened once the exact formula is confirmed.

7. Identity / lifestyle section

Goal

Sell belonging, not just ingredients.

Headline

Built for men who carry weight well.

Body copy

This is for men who care how they show up.

In work. In training. In family life. In the standards they keep for themselves.

Modern Savage is not about hype. It is about building a better baseline so you can perform with more consistency.

Why this matters

The brand will outperform if it becomes identity-first and ingredient-second.

---

8. Social proof section

Goal

Add evidence without overclaiming.

Recommended social proof mix

- 3 short customer quotes
- 1 creator-style quote
- average star rating if genuine

- “trusted by X customers” only if true

Best quote angles

- easier than expected to stick with
- feels premium
- became part of my routine
- convenient way to cover a nutritional gap

Avoid fake macho testimonials or sexual-performance style language.

---

9. Offer block

Goal

Close the sale.

Recommended structure

Show 3 buy options side by side.

1 Bottle

Best for first-time buyers.

2 Bottles

Best value for consistency.

Subscribe & Save

Best for men making it a daily ritual.

Strong page mechanics

- make subscription pre-selected
- show per-bottle savings clearly
- keep shipping info obvious

- include guarantee near CTA
- repeat “simple daily ritual” language

10. FAQ section

Goal

Remove last-minute friction.

Must-answer questions

1. What exactly is Modern Savage?
1. Why organ nutrition?
1. Who is it for?
1. When should I take it?
1. Is this a replacement for a healthy diet?
1. How long should I take it consistently?
1. Is subscription easy to cancel or change?

11. Final close

Headline

Stronger inputs. Sharper days.

Body

If you want a stronger nutritional foundation without overcomplicating your life, Modern Savage is a clean place to start.

CTA

This is where a lot of supplement brands leak conversion.

The first screen of the landing page should map directly to the angle that brought the user in.

Recommended first 4 creative angles

Angle 1 — Anti-softness

Hook: Modern life softens men. Build your edge back.

- stronger baseline
- less flat energy
- daily ritual for disciplined men

Angle 2 — Premium masculine identity

Hook: Primal nutrition. Modern edge.

- premium packaging
- premium sourcing
- cleaner, more refined tone

Angle 3 — Convenience

Hook: Organ nutrition without the prep or taste barrier.

- no prep
- no cooking organs

- easier to stay consistent

Angle 4 — Work + training performance

Hook: Built for men who want to show up sharper at work and in training.

- work, training, recovery, responsibility
- better baseline, not hype spike

First-round creative test plan

Run a small first-round matrix instead of trying to make one perfect ad.

Test set

Test 1 — Product-led static

- bottle shot
- headline: Primal nutrition. Modern edge.
- CTA: Shop Now

Test 2 — Founder/operator identity video

- hook: Built for men carrying real weight
- visual: disciplined morning / work / training
- tone: calm, strong, premium

Test 3 — Convenience UGC

- hook: easiest way I've found to make organ nutrition practical
- visual: daily routine
- strongest for skeptical cold traffic

Test 4 — Contrast ad

- hook: not bro-science. not soft wellness.

- visual: clean premium product visuals
- purpose: sharpen differentiation

What to look for

- CTR on identity-based angles vs convenience angles
- hold rate on first 3 seconds for videos
- CVR difference between subscription default vs one-time default
- AOV impact of 2-bottle and 3-bottle options

What the page should avoid

1. Too much education above the fold

Don’t make men read a white paper before they can buy.

1. Over-medical language

It kills brand charisma and creates unnecessary compliance drag.

1. Fake alpha language

Anything that sounds like parody masculinity weakens trust instantly.

1. Busy design

The product category is already unusual. The page should feel controlled and premium.

1. Weak offer framing

If the offer looks generic, the brand starts to look generic too.

Best practical next steps

Immediate

1. Build the single-product landing page first

1. Use subscription as the default selected option
1. Produce 4 creative concepts mapped to the 4 angles above
1. Write 3 short testimonial placeholders ready to replace with real reviews
1. Keep the page concise enough to work on mobile

Next after that

1. Add creator testimonials and UGC
1. Build a quiz or “is this for you?” selector if conversion data suggests buyers need more hand-holding
1. Expand into a richer brand site once the paid traffic page is proven

Final call

Modern Savage does not need more vague positioning work.

It needs a page that feels expensive, clear, masculine, and easy to buy from.

If the team ships this properly, the brand can sit in a genuinely attractive lane:

more refined than the loud primal brands, more masculine than the generic wellness brands, and easier to buy than the educational category leaders.
