Modern Savage — Podcast Target Brief

Prepared: April 28, 2026

Author: Junior

Context: DOAC is off the list (Bear has been on it). Andrew Huberman is off the list (AG1 partnership conflict). This brief covers the next tier.

For: Jesse to action by May 26 — a well-placed podcast appearance in Sep-Oct 2026 would align with the post-launch growth phase.

The Right Angle

This is not a supplement pitch. No podcast worth having Bear on will frame it that way, and Bear shouldn't either.

The conversation that opens every door on this list: "What happens to human performance when you strip away modernity?" Bear has lived the answer. He's eaten raw organs in the Arctic. He knows what the body does when you feed it what it was designed for. Modern Savage is the civilian version of that knowledge — but the conversation is about ancestral living, not a product.

The product comes up naturally: "What made you put this into a supplement?" One question, one honest answer. That's all it needs.

Tier 1 — Priority UK Targets (book these first)

1. Modern Wisdom — Chris Williamson

Reach: 1M+ YouTube, 1M+ Spotify monthly listeners, 1M IG. One of the top 10 podcasts globally in Society & Culture.

Why Bear fits: Chris's audience is male, 25-40, self-improvement obsessed. His guest list includes Goggins, McConaughey, Huberman, Jocko, Alex Hormozi, Mark Manson. Bear sits in exactly that cohort — not as a celebrity but as someone who's stress-tested the philosophy.

Conflict check: Chris co-founded Neutonic (a nootropics supplement). No direct conflict with organ supplements — different category, and it actually gives him personal context for the supplement conversation.

Best angle: The "return to savage" thesis. What Bear discovered about human capacity by being forced to eat the whole animal. Chris would lean into the mental resilience angle as much as the nutrition angle — that's a stronger episode than a supplement pitch.

Booking: chriswillx.com contact form. Chris is DM-accessible on X (@ChrisWillx). If Jesse knows him personally (he's in the influencer seeding list), a direct DM from Bear or Jesse is the right move — not a cold booking submission.

Jesse's action: Check if Bear or Jesse have any existing relationship with Chris. If yes, personal DM first. If cold, route through chriswillx.com.

Flag: Chris is Austin-based but records UK guests remotely. In-person would be stronger — if Bear is in the US for anything Sep-Oct, flag it.

---

2. Feel Better Live More — Dr. Rangan Chatterjee

Reach: Top 5 UK health podcast. 500K+ per episode. BBC Doctor in the House. 6 international bestselling books. Massive with the 35-55 UK health-conscious demographic.

Why Bear fits: Rangan's thesis is that modern medicine treats symptoms while lifestyle creates root causes. He regularly features ancestral nutrition, whole-food eating, stress and recovery. Bear's story — organs in the wild → Modern Savage — is exactly the kind of evidence-based personal narrative Rangan builds episodes around.

Conflict check: None. Rangan doesn't have supplement conflicts.

Best angle: "The food our grandfathers ate that we've forgotten." Rangan would open with the GP perspective on nutritional deficiency, Bear would close with the experiential evidence. The episode writes itself.

Booking: drchatterjee.com. UK-based (Manchester origin, now London). Likely recordable in-person if Bear is in London Sep-Oct.

Jesse's action: Route through drchatterjee.com booking contact. Include a one-paragraph pitch: Bear's polar/wilderness experience with organ nutrition + the Modern Savage angle. Rangan's team will recognise the fit immediately.

Flag: Rangan is a credible medical voice — the episode would carry significant weight with UK buyers specifically. Prioritise this one for the UK launch.

---

3. The High Performance Podcast — Jake Humphrey + Prof. Damian Hughes

Reach: Top UK performance podcast. 400K+ YouTube. Chart-topping on Apple UK. Audience: sport, business, leadership — primarily male, 30-50.

Why Bear fits: Jake and Damian interview people who've performed at the absolute edge of human capacity. Bear is a natural guest — they'd frame it around mental resilience, preparation, and the mindset of survival. The nutrition angle follows organically.

Conflict check: None.

Best angle: What does performance look like when comfort is removed entirely? The nutrition piece fits within a broader conversation about how Bear thinks about physical readiness.

Booking: thehighperformancepodcast.com. Jake Humphrey is accessible on X/IG — a direct approach from Bear's account would likely land.

Jesse's action: If Bear has any relationship with Jake (both UK sport/media world), a personal message would be faster than the booking form.

Tier 2 — US Targets (post-launch reach, secondary priority)

4. Jocko Podcast — Jocko Willink

Reach: 2M YouTube, 1.5M Spotify. Military, discipline, extreme performance. Hugely male-skewed audience, 28-45.

Why Bear fits: Jocko is a retired Navy SEAL. Bear is SAS. Both built their public identities on the military-to-civilian performance philosophy. They haven't appeared together publicly to my knowledge. The ancestral nutrition angle would land differently here — it's not a wellness conversation, it's a warrior diet conversation. What did ancient soldiers eat before battle? Why did they seek the organ meat first?

Conflict check: Jocko has his own supplement brand (Jocko Fuel — protein, greens, etc.). Organ blends are a different category. No direct conflict, but worth noting.

Best angle: The military nutrition angle. "What Bear Grylls actually ate to survive." Not wellness. Not lifestyle. Warrior fuel.

Booking: Jocko has a booking contact through his management. Cold approach less likely to work — a warm intro via the military community would be far more effective. If Bear has any SEAL/SAS crossover connections, that's the door.

Jesse's action: Check if Bear knows Jocko or has a mutual connection. If yes, this is a personal reach-out, not a booking form.

---

5. The Tim Ferriss Show

Reach: 900K+ YouTube, top 10 globally. Educated, high-earning, performance-obsessed. The "4-hour" audience reads ingredient labels.

Why Bear fits: Tim has interviewed David Goggins, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Derek Sivers, Kevin Kelly. He hasn't done a Bear episode to my knowledge. The ancestral nutrition angle would interest Tim specifically — he's written about carnivore experiments and organ nutrition in the context of biohacking.

Conflict check: Tim has taken investments in supplement companies. Check before pitching — but no obvious AG1-level conflict.

Best angle: Tim would frame it around: "What systems and inputs does Bear use that most people ignore?" The organ nutrition piece would be one thread among several — productivity, resilience, family, faith. Tim's episodes are long and go deep. This isn't a supplement pitch; it's a Bear Grylls life philosophy episode.

Booking: tim.blog/guest. Long waitlist. Cold submission unlikely to move fast. Best path: a mutual connection (Tim runs in the same circles as many people Bear knows). Worth a longer-term play.

---

6. Impact Theory — Tom Bilyeu

Reach: 2.3M YouTube. Quest Nutrition founder (sold for $1B). Understands the supplement and nutrition world from the inside.

Why Bear fits: Tom's thesis is that humans are capable of extraordinary things if they build the right mindset and inputs. Bear is Exhibit A. Tom would understand the Modern Savage positioning immediately — he built Quest on a similar "the food industry got it wrong" thesis.

Conflict check: Tom sold Quest; no active supplement conflicts known.

Best angle: Entrepreneurship + ancestral nutrition. Why Bear built this. What he learned from the wild about what the body actually needs.

Booking: impacttheory.com/guest. US-based (LA). Remote recording possible.

What NOT to Pitch

Podcast	Reason
Diary of a CEO (Steven Bartlett)	Bear already appeared — not doing again
Huberman Lab	AG1 partnership — direct supplement category conflict
Joe Rogan	Aspirational but requires warm personal intro; cold pitch won't move
Happy Place (Fearne Cotton)	Wrong demographic — predominantly female, wellness not performance
Rich Roll Podcast	Plant-based bias — organ supplements are antithetical to his thesis

---

Suggested Priority Order

1. Modern Wisdom (Chris Williamson) — highest reach, perfect demographic fit, personal contact possible
2. Feel Better Live More (Dr. Rangan Chatterjee) — best UK health credibility, strongest for UK launch
3. High Performance Podcast — strong UK performance audience, accessible booking
4. Jocko Podcast — if warm intro exists via military connections
5. Tim Ferriss — longer play, worth starting the relationship now

---

Timing Note

A Sep-Oct recording window targets a Nov-Dec episode release — 4-6 months post-launch. That's not launch press; it's second-wave growth content when the product is live and has subscriber testimonials to draw from. The episode is stronger if Bear can reference real customer results, not just a launch announcement.

If Jesse wants podcast coverage closer to launch (July 2026): aim to record May-June for a July-August release. That requires a much faster booking timeline — reach out immediately after May 21 return.

Built April 28, 2026. Replaces the DOAC brief (Bear already appeared). Jesse to select 1-2 targets and reach out by May 26 for Sep-Oct recording windows.