

Marketing these services: do's and don'ts

A plain guide for you and your team on how to tell patients about blood testing, men's hormone health, erectile dysfunction and weight management, without breaking the rules that protect you and your patients.

01 · WHY THIS MATTERS

Prescription-only medicines cannot be advertised to the public

This is the law in the UK, not a Ted's Health preference. Advertising a prescription-only medicine to the public is prohibited under the Human Medicines Regulations 2012, and the advertising code (CAP Code, rule 12.12) says the same. The advertising regulator and the medicines regulator both act on this, and weight loss, testosterone and erectile dysfunction adverts are watched closely.

It is easy to break by accident: a product name in a hashtag, a pen in a photo, an alt-text description. The good news is that you can promote everything that matters to your patients, the test, the consultation, the privacy and the convenience, without ever naming a medicine.

What is at stake for you. Your agreement with Ted's Health sets out the marketing rules (clauses 7.2 to 7.5). Misleading advertising and repeated breaches of the brand guidelines are grounds for suspension of your account (clause 17.1). Following this guide keeps you well inside the lines.

02 • THE ONE RULE

Promote the service. Never the medicine.

If you remember one thing, remember this. Talk about what the patient does, not what they might be prescribed.

TALK ABOUT

- The blood test
- The online consultation or eligibility check
- Review by a UK-registered clinician
- Privacy, convenience and access
- How the process works, step by step

NEVER MENTION

- Any medicine name or brand, or its active ingredient
- Pens, needles, vials, tablets or gels, in words or pictures
- Results, before and after images, or time-bound outcomes
- Offers or discounts tied to a treatment

03 • THE DETAIL

Do and don't, area by area

Area	Do	Don't
Medicines	Promote the consultation, the test, the condition and the process.	Name or show any prescription-only medicine or brand. No pens, needles, vials or tablets. This covers copy, hashtags, image alt text, file names and ad targeting.
Claims	Use only the approved wording in your pack, such as "may help", "if treatment is right for you" and "reviewed by a UK-registered clinician".	Guarantees, cure claims, weight lost in a set time, statistics that are not in your pack, and words like "fast" or "instant".
Images	Real, everyday adults in ordinary settings, or the approved illustrations in your pack.	Before and after photos, tape measures on waists, shirtless or physique shots, or clinical props that suggest a medicine.

Audience	Adults aged 18 and over. Weight management only for people who could meet the eligibility criteria.	Under-18s. Bodybuilding or performance audiences for men's hormone health. Body-image pressure language such as "summer body".
Who provides care	Say that patients are assessed by a UK-registered clinician. Use the provider line in your pack (see section 06).	Say that you prescribe, dispense or treat, or claim CQC registration for your own clinic unless it has its own.
Price	Show one service-level price that matches your live checkout price on the day you publish, if you choose to show one.	A generic "from £X", prices per dose, wholesale or buy prices, or any Ted's Health recommended price presented as yours.
Offers	Promote convenience, privacy and access.	Discount codes, "first month free", or any offer tied to a medicine.
Testimonials	Use only a testimonial that has been approved, with the patient's written consent and no claims about treatment outcomes.	Patient stories about results from a medicine, or influencer posts without an approved script.
Email and SMS	Send only to contacts who have given marketing consent, and always include an opt-out.	Choosing recipients from health records, for example emailing clients you know have a condition.
Clinical questions	Point patients to support@tedshealth.com .	Give clinical advice yourself, or answer medical questions in comments, DMs or at reception.

04 • BY SERVICE

What you can say about each service

BLOOD TESTING READY

Promote: the range of panels, the Testosterone Blood Test and Wellman add-ons, and the ways to collect your sample that your clinic offers.

Avoid: claiming a test detects more than it does ("cancer screening", "full body scan"), fear-led messages, and turnaround or accuracy promises.

MEN'S HORMONE HEALTH

READY

Promote: a testosterone blood test plus a review by a clinician, for adult men who want to check how they are doing.

Avoid: suggesting that tiredness or low mood means low testosterone, gym or physique imagery, and naming any treatment. Please use "men's hormone health" rather than "TRT" in public material until we confirm the final label.

ERECTILE DYSFUNCTION DEPENDS ON YOUR SETUP

Promote: a private, confidential online consultation reviewed by a clinician. Public promotion is for clinics where patients can reach the service directly. If your clinic refers patients in person, use the in-clinic referral material only.

Avoid: tablets, performance or "last longer" claims and innuendo.

WEIGHT MANAGEMENT

ONLY WHEN RELEASED TO YOU

Weight management material is released to a clinic only when your contract is signed, the service is switched on for your clinic, and the pack has been approved. Do not promote it before then.

Avoid: any medicine name, the words "jab" or "injection", pen images, weight lost in a set time, and before and after photos.

06 • WHO PROVIDES CARE

Your brand sells. Ted's Health provides the clinical care.

Patients see your clinic's brand. The clinical assessment, prescribing and blood test review are provided by Ted's Health (GSET Health Ltd), a CQC-registered provider. Patients must be told who provides the clinical service, so a short line is used on your web pages, leaflets and email footers:

Provider line (wording being confirmed):

"Clinical assessment, prescribing and blood test review are provided by Ted's Health (GSET Health Ltd), a CQC-registered provider." final wording to be confirmed

- Do not use Ted's Health logos or marks without written consent (clause 7.2).
- Do not present Ted's Health as the patient-facing brand (clause 6.5).
- The CQC statement belongs to Ted's Health as the provider. Do not say your own clinic is CQC-registered for these services unless it separately is.

07 • ANYTHING NEW

Want to publish something that is not in your pack?

Ted's Health must approve clinical and treatment content before you use it (clause 7.4). Send the draft before you publish, and wait for an approval code. Every approved item carries a code, so we can tell you quickly if anything needs to be withdrawn.
