BEAR WITNESS X ALFRED — 9 APRIL 2026 — REBUILT FROM OFFICIAL DECK

Digital Media Strategy Brief

Full context brief built from Alfred's official investor deck. Input this into Claude alongside the Alfred PDF to generate the social media strategy.

WHAT ALFRED ACTUALLY IS

Alfred is a UK membership company that centralises all of a household's essential services — energy, broadband, mobile, home insurance, and car insurance — into one app, one bill, and one phone number. Members pay a fixed £20/month membership fee and receive all services at wholesale prices. Alfred makes money on the membership fee only — not on utility margins.

Simpler

Everything from one provider. Single point of contact. 3 working days/year less admin.

Easier

24/7 chat support. AI answers first, escalates to human instantly. One continuous conversation.

Fairer

Wholesale prices. No hidden charges. No loyalty penalties. No price hikes. Target savings: ~£1,000/year.

> Alfred's vision: "To create the most trusted brand in the UK." Members switch everything to Alfred, safe in the knowledge they will never overpay again.

Why this hasn't existed before

AI and cloud infrastructure now make multi-service support viable at scale. Alfred uses AI-augmented agents for customer service — AI handles queries first, escalates to humans when needed. This is what makes the unit economics work.

Alfred's team

- Tom (CEO) — Former President, Afiniti
- Bear Witness works alongside Alfred's marketing team, not instead of them.
- Chris (Energy) — CEO, OVO; Former CFO, Utility Warehouse
- Tom F — Former CPO, Utility Warehouse
- NEDs: Ronan Dunne (former CEO Verizon + O2), Peter (CEO Esure, former MD British Gas)

Investors

- Liberty Global (owners of Virgin Media O2) invested £2.5m in a £7.5m seed round at £22.5m pre-money valuation
- Sponsored by Liberty Global CEO Mike Fries — Alfred is based at Liberty's London HQ
- Liberty Global's Virgin Media O2 relationship gave Alfred access to a national UK mobile network (same as Sky and Tesco Mobile)
- Hellman & Friedman owners also invested
- Ongoing investment conversations with Which? and MONY Group

THE MARKET PROBLEM

92%
HOUSEHOLDS UNHAPPY WITH OVERPAYING OR NEEDING TO SWITCH TO SAVE

28M
UK HOUSEHOLDS — ALFRED TARGETING THE TOP 30%

£1,000
TARGET ANNUAL SAVING PER ALFRED MEMBER

60%
AGGREGATE VALUE REPRESENTED BY TOP 30% OF HOUSEHOLDS

The headlines say it all: energy "cheap deal" traps, broadband firms betting on fear of going offline, AA charging loyal members 200% more than newcomers, mobile networks selling 5x the data you need. Every utility category is built on the inertia economy — profiting from consumers' reluctance to call. Alfred removes the incentive to do this entirely.

TARGET AUDIENCE

Primary: Mid-upper homeowner segment. 3+ bedroom homes, 2+ cars, £0.4m-£1.5m home value. This top 30% of UK households represents ~60% of aggregate utility spend across all four sectors. They spend more, they have more services, and they have the most to save.

Alfred's own trust archetypes for early adopters:

- Consumer protectors — people who actively research and champion fair deals

- Home experts — engaged homeowners who manage their household proactively
- Smart money — financially savvy, hate waste, early adopters of fintech-style products

This is not a mass-market product at launch. The social media strategy should speak to aspirational homeowners who are organised, financially aware, and frustrated by the fragmentation of their household admin.

THE REAL COMPETITOR: UTILITY WAREHOUSE

Alfred's only genuine structural competitor is Utility Warehouse (Telecom Plus PLC) — the only other multi-service utility provider in the UK. UW has grown customers at 15%+ CAGR over 20+ years and proven the demand for multi-service bundling at scale.

But UW is ripe for disruption:

- Built around and beholden to a multi-level marketing distribution machine
- Brand and approach skewed to lower-mid market — not the premium homeowner segment Alfred targets
- Non-transparent pricing hidden behind "bundle discounts"
- Owned by income investors prioritising dividends over growth
- Legacy tech creating poor customer experience

Alfred is coming for UW's market with better tech, better branding, transparent pricing, and a target audience UW cannot serve.

Utility Warehouse — THE competitor

Only multi-service provider. 15%+ CAGR over 20 years. But MLM-dependent, lower-market, legacy tech. Premium

uSwitch / MoneySuperMarket

Not competitors — they help people find slightly better deals within the broken system. Alfred replaces the system. Different category entirely.

homeowners won't touch it. This is who Alfred displaces.

Monzo / Revolut (analogy)

Best comparison for brand strategy. Disrupted banking with radical transparency and consumer alignment. Same playbook for utilities. Alfred is Monzo for your household bills.

ALFRED'S LAUNCH PLAN (ALREADY DEFINED)

Alfred has a clear launch strategy — the social media strategy should amplify it, not contradict it:

Apr 2026 Home & motor insurance ready. Broadband ready. Bear Witness engagement begins.

Jun 2026 Waitlist launches — Monzo-style in-app waiting list, trust and authenticity over virality. Founding members onboarded in waves.

Jul 2026 Mobile ready. First waitlisters onboarded. Golden tickets mechanic — new members can give a friend a ticket to skip the queue.

Aug-Sep 2026 Energy ready. CS software live. All four services fully operational.

Nov 2026 Public release. All services live, AI support active, full member onboarding.

Alfred's own scaling channels (from their deck)

1. Direct response: Google, Instagram, Facebook, MoneySavingExpert, Rightmove, Which?, The Telegraph, The Guardian, MoneySuperMarket, Daily Mail, Thames Water, Hometrack
2. Channel partners: M&S, Waitrose, American Express, The Times, David Lloyd Clubs, Savills, Knight Frank, Costco, Vitality, Mindful Chef, John Lewis, HomeServe

3. Influencer marketing: Olly Proudlock, Mike Tindall, Will Greenwood, Justin Rose, Anthony Joshua, Bear Grylls

Community and mission

Alfred is committing 1% of membership revenues to Fields in Trust (protected parks and green spaces). President: Jill Scott MBE. Alfred's "More Life, Less Admin" mission is positioned as giving people their time back — aligned with protecting shared outdoor spaces. This is a powerful content and community angle.

WHY BEAR WITNESS — NOT AN AGENCY, A PARTNER

The digital media industry is full of agencies that take a brief, deliver a deck, and invoice monthly regardless of results. Bear Witness is built on a fundamentally different model — and for a pre-launch brand like Alfred, that difference is everything.

The agency model is broken for early-stage brands

A standard agency charges a retainer, assigns a junior account manager, and optimises for client retention rather than brand growth. They are incentivised to keep you dependent, not to make you independently successful. They hand over a content calendar. They report on vanity metrics. They cycle through staff. And when the brand doesn't grow as expected, they write a new proposal for a new retainer.

Alfred doesn't need that. Alfred needs someone who thinks like a co-founder, moves like a startup, and is financially aligned with the outcome.

How Bear Witness works

Bear Witness is the digital media company Jesse Grylls runs across all his projects. The model: we take equity, not inflated fees. We embed into the brand and build the systems, the content engine, and the audience from zero — and we stay long enough to see it compound.

This is not a service relationship. Bear Witness becomes part of Alfred. The digital media operation is built as if we are shareholders, because we are.

> The core difference: An agency optimises for their own continuity. Bear Witness optimises for Alfred's growth. Those are not the same thing.

What long-term integration looks like

Every system Bear Witness builds — email lists, SEO authority, social following, paid audiences — is owned by Alfred permanently. We build for 24 months, not 3. Every piece of content is part of a longer narrative. Every audience is an asset. Bear Witness is structured around compounding, not campaigns.

Partnership structure

- Monthly retainer — covers Jesse's time, production costs, paid media management
- Equity — Bear Witness is aligned on Alfred's long-term outcome, not deliverables
- No lock-in to vanity metrics — success = member growth, waitlist signups, brand search uplift
- Direct access — Jesse works directly with Tom. No briefing chains.
- Everything stays with Alfred — all audiences, all content, all infrastructure is Alfred's asset

STRATEGIC PHILOSOPHY (FROM JESSE'S ORIGINAL ANALYSIS)

Don't play their game

The moment Alfred competes on incentives — referral codes, gamification, discounts — it mentally brackets itself alongside the companies it's replacing. The incumbents have to play that game because they lack integrity. Alfred doesn't have that problem.

Earn the relationship, don't buy it

When you win a customer through a gimmick, the dynamic is set from day one: you work for them. The relationship is transactional. Instead: tell them the problem. Make them feel the pain — the overpaying, the loyalty penalties, the inertia economy quietly taking them for a ride. Then show them Alfred. The customer doesn't feel sold to. They feel rescued. That gratitude is the foundation of loyalty that actually compounds.

The narrative: a movement, not a product

Alfred isn't a comparison tool or a bundle provider. It's the brand that finally told the truth about household bills and did something about it. "A company for the people." The content strategy, social voice, and brand positioning should all flow from this. Not: here's a deal. Instead: here's what's been happening to your money, here's why, here's how Alfred stops it.

WHAT THE SOCIAL MEDIA STRATEGY NEEDS TO COVER

1. Brand voice and positioning — tone guide for Alfred's social channels. Smart, slightly cheeky, anti-admin. The friend who's sorted their bills and wants you to do the same. Premium homeowner audience, not mass market.
2. Pre-launch waitlist strategy (now - June 2026) — building anticipation and a qualified waitlist. Golden ticket mechanic. Which channels, what content, what CTA.
3. Channel priority and rationale — TikTok, Instagram, YouTube, LinkedIn, Facebook. Which channels for which audience segments and why.

4. Content pillars — the recurring content types that build audience and drive trust over time. Education, outrage, transformation, community, behind-scenes.
5. The "inertia economy" content series — explainers on how the loyalty penalty works across every utility category. This is Alfred's core organic growth engine.
6. Influencer and trust archetype strategy — how to engage consumer protectors, home experts, and smart money people. Which influencers and why. Note: as Bear Witness manages Alfred's marketing, any Bear Grylls brand activation would be straightforward to integrate where relevant, but this is a small part of a broader influencer approach.
7. Channel partner social strategy — how to leverage M&S, Waitrose, David Lloyd, Costco etc. for co-branded social reach to exactly the right audience.
8. Fields in Trust community angle — how the 1% charity partnership becomes a content and community building tool.
9. Launch month content plan (November 2026) — the specific content that converts waitlist to members at public release.
10. Milestones — what does success look like at waitlist launch (June), first wave onboarding (July-Sept), and public release (November)?

PROMPT FOR YOUR CLAUDE

Paste this into Claude with the Alfred deck attached:

I've attached Alfred's official investor deck and a detailed strategy brief from Bear Witness. Alfred is a UK membership company — £20/month for wholesale energy, broadband, mobile, home and car insurance all in one place. Pre-launch, waitlist going live June 2026, public release November 2026. Bear Witness (Jesse Grylls's digital media company) is building Alfred's entire social media presence from scratch.

Target audience: mid-upper UK homeowners, 3+ beds, financially organised, the top 30% who represent 60% of utility spend. Not mass market.

Core brand territory: "More Life, Less Admin." The emotional strategy is not about savings — it's about rescuing people from a system that's been quietly taking them for a ride. Don't sell. Tell the truth. Make them feel found.

Using everything above, build a full HTML social media strategy. Include: channel priorities with rationale, content pillars with specific post/video ideas for each, pre-launch waitlist content plan (April-June), launch month plan (November), influencer strategy, the inertia economy content series concept, and measurable milestones. Be specific and bold. No generic advice.
